

Ireland and Empire, 1692–1770

Charles Ivar McGrath, Trinity College, Dublin

Ireland and Empire examines the role Ireland played in the establishment of the first British Empire. McGrath explores the contributions the Irish made British financial power and military strength, key elements in the Empire's formative years.

Readership

Irish Studies, Military History, Economics and Financial History

Hb: c.256pp: August 2008
978 1 85196 896 1: £60/$99

Transoceanic Radical:

William Duane, National Identity and Empire, 1760–1835

Nigel Little, Edith Cowan University

This is the first biography of the influential radical journalist William Duane. It studies his American career in light of his formative years in Ireland, England and India. Little explores how membership of the London Corresponding Society helped shape Duane's later Federalist convictions

Readership

Irish, Indian and US History, History of Print and Publishing, Eighteenth-Century Radicalisms

Hb: 294pp: February 2008
978 1 85196 929 6: £60/$99

Empire of Political Thought:

Indigenous Australians and the Language of Colonial Government

Bruce Buchan, Griffith University

Buchan explains how European colonists in Australia represented the Indigenous peoples they found there, and the tasks of governing them within the terms of Western political thought.

Readership

Commonwealth History, Political Theory, Historical Anthropology

Hb: c.256pp: October 2008
978 1 85196 925 8: £60/$99

Empires in Perspective

Series Editors: Tony Ballantyne, Duncan Bell, Francisco Bethencourt, Emmanuel K Akyeampong and Durba Ghosh

This new monograph series publishes volumes that address important dimensions of imperial history, from the early modern world to the twentieth century. Ranging across diverse imperial histories, the series is not limited to any geographical area, state or empire. The editors welcome proposals from political, social, economic and cultural historians, as well as historians of science and political theory. They encourage methodological pluralism, and do not seek to impose any particular conception of historical scholarship. Although books published will be driven by primary research, they seek to address wider questions in the study of imperial history.

Readership

Empire and Colonial Studies, History, Political Science, Anthropology

'Columbus taking possession of the new country' (1893)
LOC [LC-USZC2-1687]

Editorial board

Duncan Bell is at the University of Cambridge

Tony Ballantyne is at the University of Otago

Francisco Bethencourt is at King's College London

Emmanuel K Akyeampong is at Harvard University

Durba Ghosh is at Cornell University

Between Empire and Revolution:

A Life of Sidney Bunting, 1873–1936

Allison Drew, University of York

This is the first scholarly biography of Sidney Bunting. His life illustrates the complex social networks and values that were carried across the world in the name of the British Empire. The lawyer son of Wesleyan social activists, Bunting was radicalized in South Africa. He helped found the Communist party and campaigned for black emancipation.

Readership

South African History, History of Communism

Hb: c.304pp: March 2007
978 1 85196 893 0: £60/$99

Missionary Education and Empire in Late Colonial India, 1860–1920

Hayden J A Bellenoit, University of Oxford

Focusing on late colonial India, Bellenoit analyses education in colonial society. Most scholars view missionary teachers as handmaidens of the empire, and their theology as intrinsically imperialistic. However, Bellenoit argues that their interaction with India led them away from imperial norms; a simplistic division of colonisers and colonised is insufficient to explain power relations in late colonial India.

Readership

Religious Studies, Indian History, Victorian Studies

Hb: c.256pp: July 2007
978 1 85196 894 7: £60/$99

A Wider Patriotism:

Alfred Milner and the British Empire

J Lee Thompson, Lamar University

This is the first study of Milner to take his imperial politics, or 'constructive' imperialism as its primary theme. His career is examined as a whole, from the genesis of his imperial ideology at Oxford, through his time as High Commissioner in South Africa during the Boer War, to his days as Minister of War during the final seven months of the First World War

Readership

South African History, British Political History

Hb: c.256pp: June 2007
978 1 85196 891 6: £60/$99

Natural Science and the Origins of the British Empire

Sarah Irving, University of Oxford

Irving relates seventeenth-century advancements in natural science to England's colonisation of the Atlantic world. As Robert Boyle and his contemporaries discovered, Ireland, North America and the Caribbean yielded a wealth of new knowledge. They collected information about native peoples, crops, soil and climate. Irving argues that men of science used new data to build an intellectual as well as a geographical empire.

Readership

History of Science, History of Travel and Exploration, Early Modern History

Hb: c.256pp: June 2008
978 1 85196 889 3: £60/$99