Warfare, Society and Culture

Series Editors: Paul E J Hammer, Louis Sicking, Frank Tallett and David J B Trim

This series focuses on works which integrate analysis of military operations and combat into wider social and cultural analysis, and which examine warfare as more than a European phenomenon. It covers the period from the early modern era and its 'military revolution' to the first half of the twentieth century.

Readership

War Studies, Military History, Early Modern, Modern and Contemporary History

Arming the Royal Navy, 1793–1815: The Office of Ordnance and the State Gareth Cole

The Office of Ordnance has been ill-served by previous accounts of its role during the French Revolution and Napoleonic Wars. By examining the Ordnance alongside other government bodies – the Admiralty, the War Office and the Home Office – Cole offers an account of how and why the Royal Navy was equipped as it was. He shows that the Office of Ordnance was much more proactive, modernizing and efficient during this period than was previously thought.

The Jacobite Campaigns: The British State at War

Jonathan Oates

The military aspects of the Jacobite campaigns in eighteenth-century Britain are considered in this study. Taken from the viewpoint of those loyal to the Hanoverian Crown, the three mainland campaigns of 1715–6, 1719 and 1745–6 are examined, using research based on primary sources: memoirs, diaries, letters, newspapers and State papers. Oates looks at how the eighteenth-century military machine operated in a domestic context, as well as its effectiveness.

Orde Wingate and the British Army, 1922–1944

Simon Anglim

Anglim's biography fills a significant void in the literature, making extensive use of Wingate's papers to place him in the context of the British army of the time.

Military Economics, Culture and Logistics in the Burma Campaign, 1942–1945

Graham Dunlop

Dunlop studies the operational and strategic effects of logistics on the Burma campaign. He argues that the campaign's development was driven more by what was logistically possible than by pure strategic intent.
