

Empires in Perspective

This important series examines a diverse range of imperial histories from the early modern period to the twentieth century. Drawing on works of political, social, economic and cultural history, the history of science and political theory, the series encourages methodological pluralism and does not impose any particular conception of historical scholarship. While focused on particular aspects of empire, works published also seek to address wider questions on the study of imperial history.

Reviews

‘superbly researched and beautifully written.’
Twentieth-Century British History on Between Empire and Revolution

‘crucial to our understanding of the early modern English world whether our focus is Atlantic colonial America or the British Isles’
Journal of British Studies on The English Empire in America, 1602–1658

‘In this shrewd, readable and telling new biography, we have one more essential part of the jigsaw puzzle of who we are and why we relate to the world in the way we do.’
The Australian Literary Review on Australian Between Empires

‘an important contribution to South Asian social and educational history, to the history of the modern Protestant missionary movement, and to the wider debate over the relationships between religion, missions and empire’
New Zealand Journal of Asian Studies on Missionary Education and Empire in Late Colonial India, 1860–1920

‘a superb radical history and highlights a man who played a leading role in the struggle for liberty in three continents.’

The Journal of Radical History on Transoceanic Radical, William Duane

‘draws in a number of intriguing and traditionally overlooked colonial aspects of the careers of eminent philosophers’
British Journal for the History of Science
on Natural Science and the Origins of the British Empire

‘may encourage scholars of both Native American and Euro-American history to rethink performance culture as a vehicle for imperial transformation’
Journal of American Studies on
The Theatre of Empire

‘we can thank Thompson for providing us with the ‘behind the scenes’ details of many of Milner’s ideas and relationships, shorn of proto-imperialist bombast.’
Twentieth-Century British History
on A Wider Patriotism

Forthcoming Titles

Race and Identity in the Tasman World, 1769–1840

Rachel Standfield

British imperial encounters with indigenous cultures created perceptions and stereotypes that still persist today. The initial creation of racial images in relation to violence – such as ‘warrior race’ or ‘unoffending people’ – had particular consequences for land ownership. Whilst the Maori of New Zealand were understood to be sovereign owners of their country, Australian Aboriginals were not. Standfield examines these differences and how they occurred.

Baudin, Napoleon and the Exploration of Australia

Nicole Starbuck

This is the first in-depth study of Nicolas Baudin’s scientific expedition to Australia in 1802. Starbuck focuses on the reconstruction of the voyage during the expedition’s stay in colonial Sydney and how this sheds new light on our understanding of Napoleonic France. Previous histories have viewed Baudin’s time in Sydney as little more than an opportunity for the French to recuperate after their journey, however Starbuck presents it as a pivotal moment in French history, intellectual thought and imperialism.

Published Titles

British Engineers and Africa, 1875–1914

Casper Andersen

Using a wide range of primary sources including correspondence, diaries, technical reports, institutional minutes and periodicals, Andersen reconstructs the networks and activities of Britain's engineers while focusing on London as a centre of imperial expansion. Treating Britain and the empire as an interconnected zone Andersen analyses how both ideas and technologies were exchanged between colonial powers and the colonized peripheries.
