Irish independence remains high on the political agenda today. It has its roots in the democratic movements of the nineteenth century. This four-volume facsimile edition looks at the lives and politics of four of the key players in the independence and labour movements of the nineteenth century: Daniel O'Connell (1775-1847) a non-violent campaigner for Catholic emancipation; Charles Stewart Parnell (1846-91) Home Rule MP; Michael Davitt (1846-1906) member of the violent Irish Republican Brotherhood and founder of the Irish Land League; and James Bronterre O'Brien (1805-64) a Chartist leader and working-class reformer. The material collected here allows scholars to explore how they were viewed across the world during their lifetimes, and how their reputations developed after their deaths.

Wide-ranging political issues are addressed: Catholic Emancipation, self-governance, land-reform, universal suffrage and the labour movement, as well as the over-arching question of whether physical force should be used to achieve political ends if the democratic process collapses.

This edition will be useful to those studying nineteenth-century British and Irish history, Chartism, the history of the labour and abolitionist movements, and the rise of Irish Nationalism.

'This is a magisterial production in size and scope...the majority [of the texts] are held only in specialist libraries; hence the greater accessibility enabled by this publication, plus the bonus of their combination in a volume with relevant others, will be greatly welcomed by historians of Ireland and students of development and famine studies.'
